JOSH FOR SENATE

West Bay residents feeling blue about losing the excellent state Senator Elizabeth Roberts, as she pursues a run for lieutenant governor, should be comforted by the presence of an excellent successor lying in the wings. This is Joshua Miller, and, indeed, he is a Casa Diablo regular. (Disclosure: Miller, besides being a longtime Phoenix advertiser, has a relationship with P&J that precedes our involvement with this newspaper. He is our friend and we are totally biased in his favor.)

Josh has been a Vo Dilun small business owner for 31 years, and his civic and charitable efforts are legion. He's got the talent and the tools to get things done, and he's as honest and committed to fairness and justice as anyone we know.

His campaign concerns include inequities in the tax structure, the impact of high energy costs, and how the growing expense of health-care is putting it out of reach for more and more people. Josh has some ideas. He points out, "On energy, for example, we can take a fresh approach to the energy issue that holds the Public Utilities Commission accountable to protect the consumer, not the interests of oil, gas, and electric companies. We must reward those who strive towards energy independence by using alternative sources."
